

Established in 2005, the Rutgers Robert Wood Johnson Medical School Department of Dermatology is committed to the delivery of exemplary patient care, teaching, and research. The Department recognizes the need to provide high-quality services to benefit present and future patients suffering with diseases and abnormalities of the skin. Each member of our team works collectively toward building patient care services, educational programs and research that are critical to patient outcomes. With its continued growth, the department's primary focus is to establish itself as a center of excellence in clinical care, education and research, and as a leading center for academic dermatology.

Education/Residency Program

The Dermatology Residency at Robert Wood Johnson Medical School began in 2001. The program offers professional training for residents and medical students in the latest skills and knowledge of dermatology. We provide our residents and rotating medical students a broad range of educational experiences.
